Jon helps clients navigate and solve complex problems in and out of the courtroom. He has been recognized by clients, adversaries, and neutrals as a top tier trial lawyer who presents issues clearly and persuasively.

He has significant experience in federal and state courts, regulatory agencies, arbitrations, and mediations. He focuses his practice on three areas: complex commercial litigation, state and local tax controversies, and bankruptcy/receivership matters.

In his business litigation practice, he advises clients in a variety of industries, including recreation, mining, commercial and multifamily real estate, oil and gas, healthcare, and financial services. He has successfully litigated breach of contract and business tort claims for over two decades and has successfully tried multiple cases to judgment and verdict.

In his state and local tax practice, he represents clients in sales, use, gross receipts, and property tax matters. He recently won a multi-million dollar refund on one of his client's qualification for a statutory medical services deduction after a multi-day district court trial.

In his bankruptcy/receivership practice, he represents creditors in bankruptcy adversary proceeding litigation and creditors and court-appointed receivers in receivership cases across multiple industries.

Jon is also a longstanding member of the firm's diversity committee and serves as the Administrative Partner of the Denver office. In that role, he is responsible for administrative oversight and direction of the office and drives market-based initiatives to promote the firm's brand and services.

EXPERIENCE

Pro Bono

Jon maintains an active pro bono practice, having represented clients in administrative, district court, and appellate litigation. Notably, he has briefed issues before the United States Supreme Court concerning the legality of lethal injections and the public's right to record public officials performing their official duties. See Estate of Lockett v. Fallin, Case No. 16-1255; Frasier v. Evans, Case No. 21-57.

In addition, he worked with a team of Holland & Hart lawyers for four years to litigate habeas corpus petitions on behalf of several Guantanamo Bay detainees in district and appellate courts, which involved obtaining a secret
