Cameron's extensive experience encompasses all aspects of litigation, including administrative appeals, pleadings and discovery, pre-trial motion practice, and trial preparation. In addition to expertly guiding clients towards efficient and effective resolutions of active disputes, his practice extends to advising clients on the potential legal implications of business and policy decisions.

Among other things, he has deep expertise in state procurement law, including the bidding process for substantial state contracts and subsequent administrative appeals. Cameron helps healthcare providers manage compliance and business development efforts under the complex framework of state and federal healthcare laws.

Cameron leverages his public policy expertise and experience in the federal courts to help clients anticipate potential legal consequences of developing case law, new legislation, and administrative rulemaking at both state and federal levels. He provides comprehensive legal risk analyses that empower his clients to make informed business decisions and position themselves ahead of potential disputes.

Cameron's diverse array of clients includes major Idaho corporations, public institutions, as well as hospitals and other healthcare-related businesses across the state.
