

The Devil's in the Details

Insight — 12/03/2018

Not understanding common contract terms and failing to renegotiate certain provisions when appropriate can cause unnecessary risk and liability.

Reading the fine print in a business contract is probably not your idea of a good time. You have a busy practice and negotiating contracts is clearly not why you became a veterinarian or hospital administrator. That said, every business owner or manager should have a firm understanding of which contract provisions require careful review. This is important because contracts create significant obligations and liabilities.

Nicole Snyder, Holland & Hart's Animal Health and Pet Products Industry Group co-chair, highlights five common business contract agreement provisions and potential pitfalls veterinarians or hospital administrators need to avoid in the article titled "The Devil's in the Details," published by Today's Veterinary Business in its December 2018 issue.

Nicole Snyder is a corporate partner at Holland & Hart, where she advises clients on mergers, acquisitions and complex employment matters. She is a member of the American Veterinarian Medical Law Association.

To read the full article, click here.

This publication is designed to provide general information on pertinent legal topics. The statements made are provided for educational purposes only. They do not constitute legal or financial advice nor do they necessarily reflect the views of Holland & Hart LLP or any of its attorneys other than the author(s). This publication is not intended to create an attorney-client relationship between you and Holland & Hart LLP. Substantive changes in the law subsequent to the date of this publication might affect the analysis or commentary. Similarly, the analysis may differ depending on the jurisdiction or circumstances. If you have specific questions as to the application of the law to your activities, you should seek the advice of your legal counsel.